Barringer High School
Newark, New Jersey

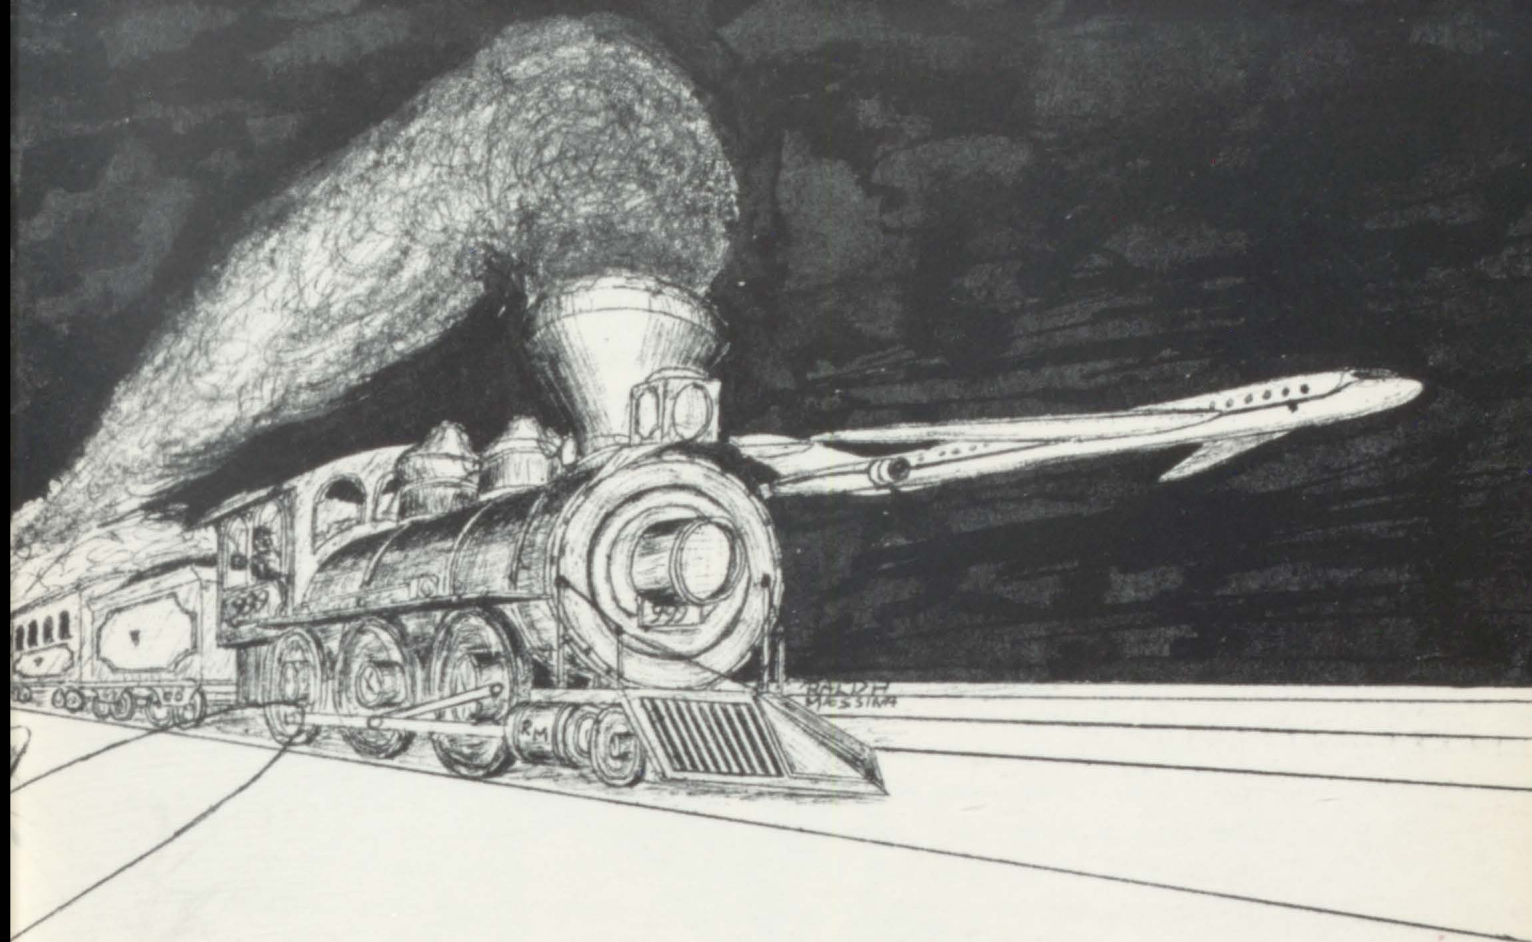

The Going Could be Easier

Our civilization today represents the accumulation of discovery, invention, and acquired knowledge. This is the product of mankind's persistent endeavor for improvement. What has been achieved has been dearly earned. Progress is admittedly a slow process, if one regards the total sweep of history. But we can be heartened by the fact that more progress is being made in this century than in all other centuries combined.

The editors of this yearbook are of the opinion that every graduate should be cognizant of man's past achievements, his unfulfilled goals, and the problem areas awaiting solution. We would like to think that each senior leaves Barringer High School with a sense of purpose—to serve the development of mankind.

The progress of civilization has been ponderous and frequently discouraging. That which benefits mankind is not always welcome. Men of vision have often been ridiculed, disparaged, and even condemned; the realization of their ideas are thus impeded. It must be admitted that it is Man's lack of understanding and his ignorance that hinders growth and development. Man's achievement must be accelerated; this is an imperative of this threatening age.

As seniors, we must be aware of issues, and we must be in the forefront of encouraging man's struggle against his environment, sickness, poverty, tyranny, and the forces of nature. Let us not be parasites! Let us promise to do our part to move forward. For, we, too, are mankind!

Our Man in the Guidance Office

Mr. Hilton Otero counsels Donna Rattenne on college prospects.

*"En todo estás, y todo eres."
"You are in everything, and you are everything."*

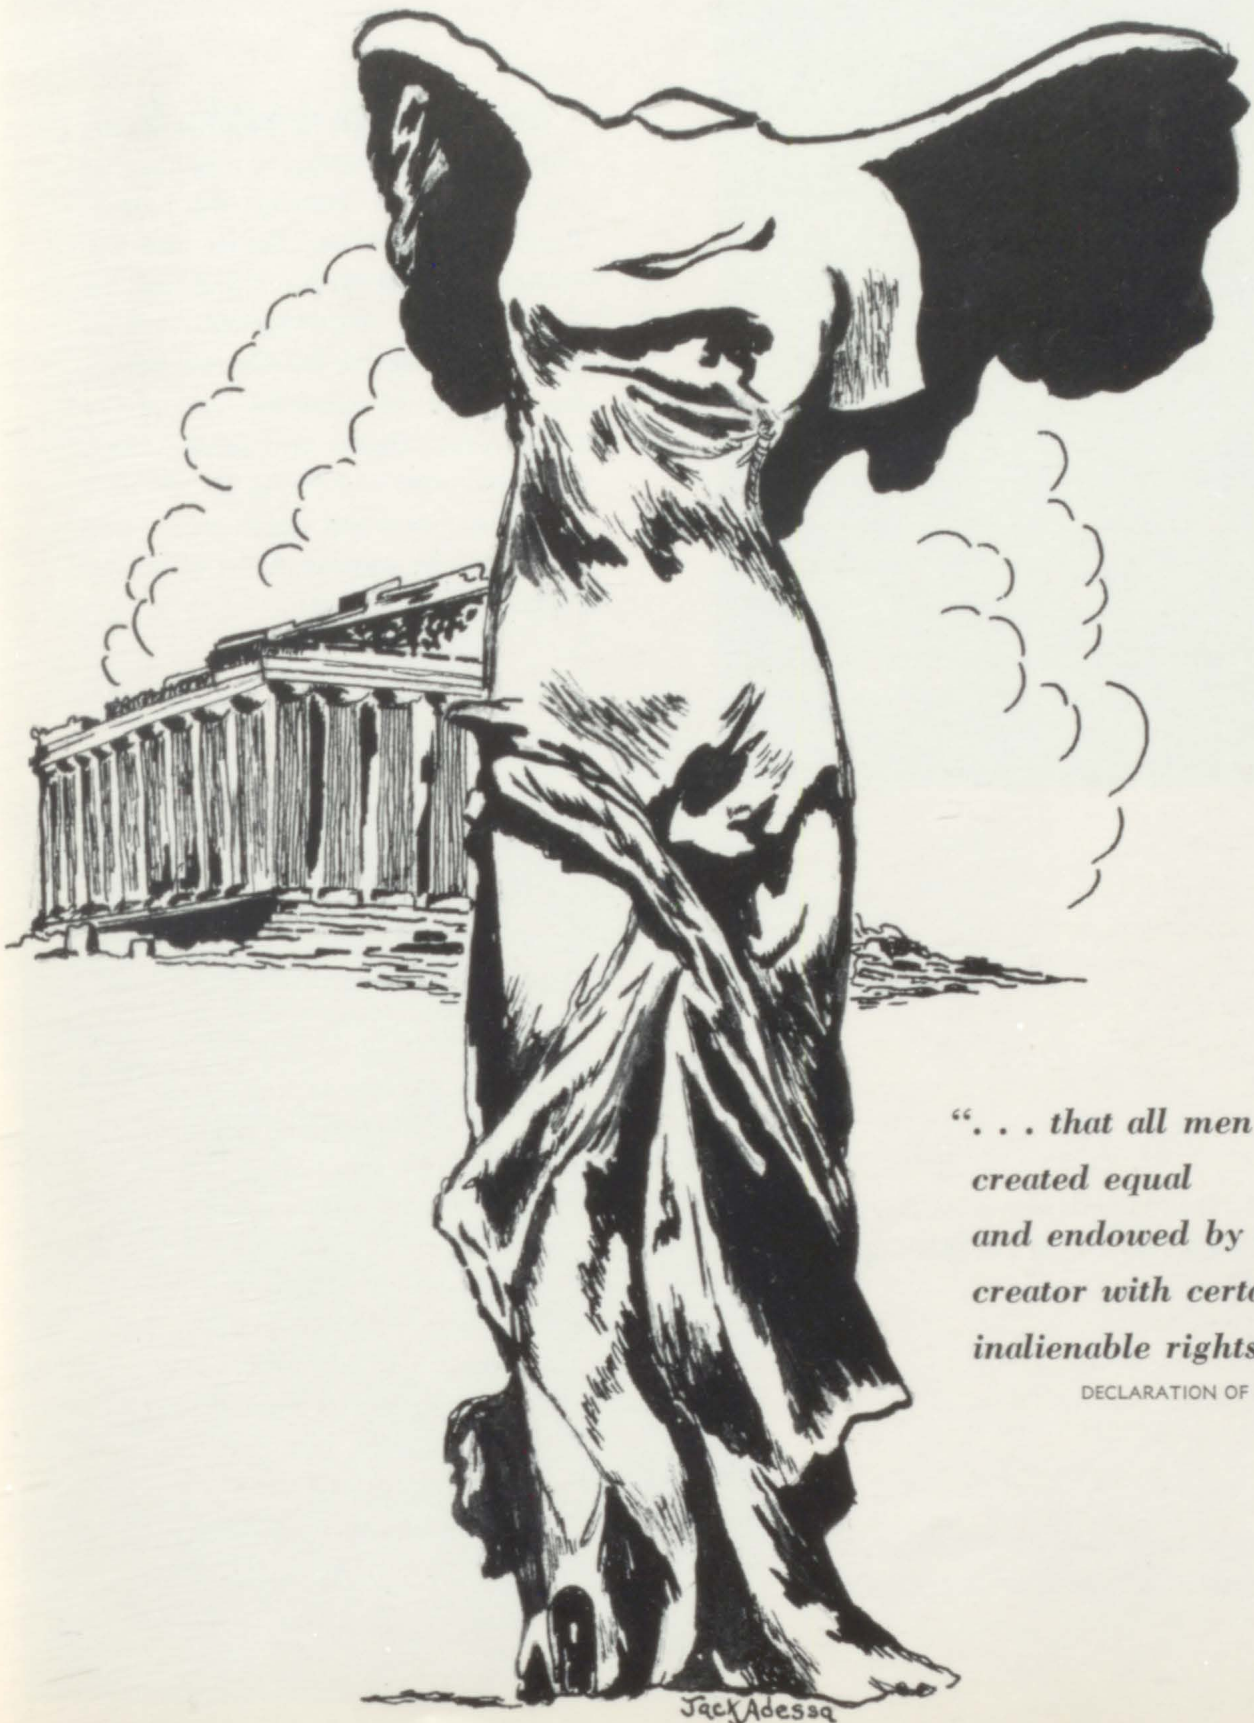

We can think of no other line of poetry more appropriate than this by one of Spain's outstanding poets, Rosalía Castro, to describe Mr. Hilton Otero. The Class of June, 1963, is proud to dedicate the Yearbook to one who literally is in everything because of his ability, versatility, and humanity. Outstanding teacher, persevering guidance counselor, violin virtuoso—this begins the long list of influences which Mr. Otero has exerted upon students, friends, and community. We honor him for epitomizing the highest traditions and principles of his profession.

Teaching is a most worthy profession. It is a field of endeavor that undergirds our Republic and civilization. It is a profession that necessitates high standards of performance, sterling character, and a sense of responsibility.

His enthusiasm for learning and teaching extends beyond the classroom, to courses for city officials and employees who found a need and a joy in his Spanish classes. No matter what the situation—coaching a Spanish play for an Assembly program, teaching Spanish to faculty members from the Newark high schools, helping to fill out college applications, or expounding on music, poetry, and moral standards, Mr. Otero captures his listeners with charm and wisdom.

As we leave our youthful days behind to travel varied and complex experiences in this fast-changing world, we shall remember many things, Mr. Otero. Vaya con Dios, dear friend.

Administrators Must Lead

Mr. William R. Cain Fosters Community Spirit

Principal William R. Cain has always realized that the school is a product of the community. Through the Parent-Teachers Association, Father and Son Association, the North Ward Citizens Committee for Better Schools, and an open door policy to all parents, he has done much to generate community social consciousness and pride. Here, he is pictured welcoming Dr. Bernard Mirin, a practicing psychiatrist, who addressed the parents on the emotional problems of teenagers.

Mr. David Blank, vice principal, roots for Mayor Addonizio's kickoff during the South Side game.

Preventive Medicine Pays Off!

A Shot in Time

Dr. Edward Rattenne administers the tine test with the assistance of R. N. Kocian. Mr. Blank keeps the 1,500 students moving in order.

Advice Is a Frequent Prescription

Dr. Anna Schults asks nurse to arrange for clinical examination of a student.

Principal's Report

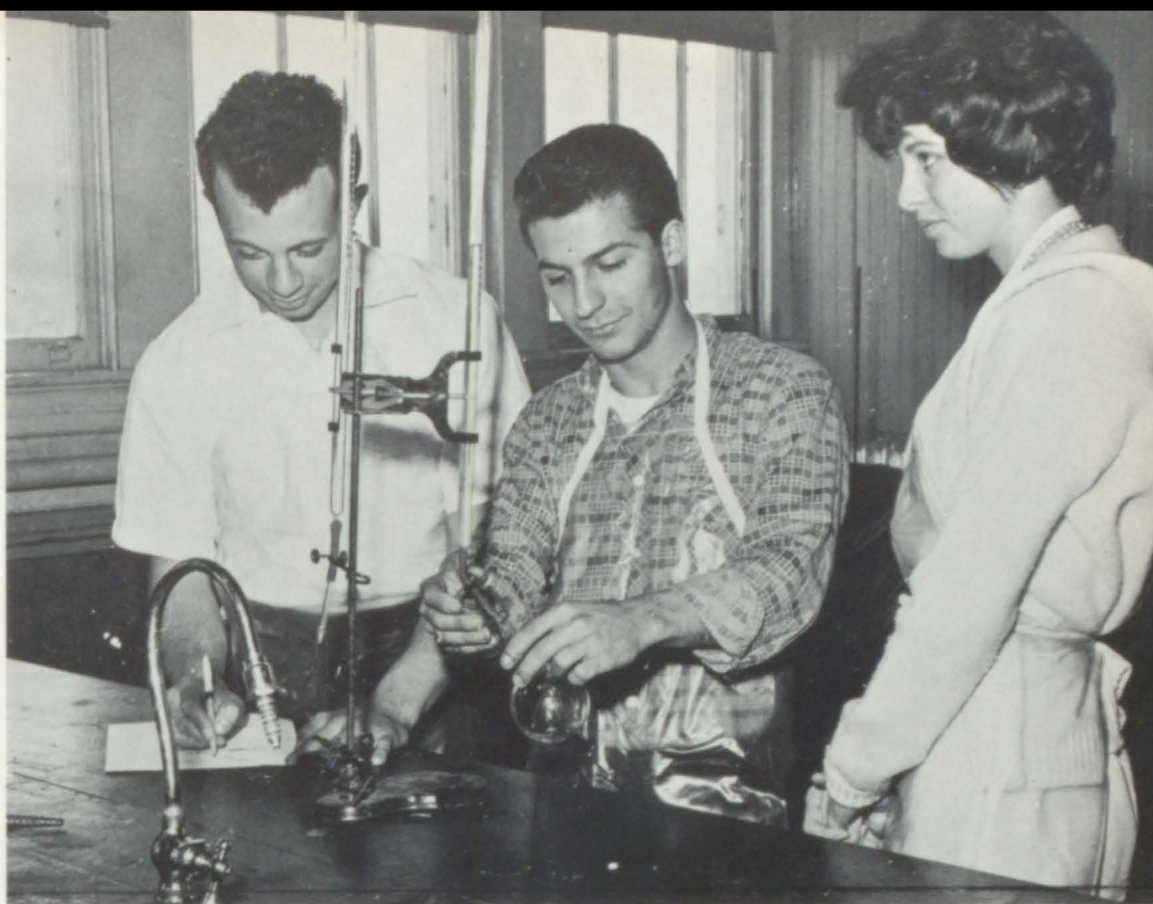

At the close of each school year, the principal is required to submit a report, summarizing the major activities and developments in his school, to the Superintendent of Public Schools in the City of Newark. We have selected highlights from the report to pictorialize.

Sciences are interrelated among themselves and with its language, mathematics. To be properly taught, these relationships of integrated bodies of knowledge must be perceived.

Integrated Science specialists use portable sextants to work out a problem of triangulation on the site of the New Barringer.

Chemists work on a basic experiment of titration.

Sophomores who show an abiding interest in the biological sciences are encouraged to probe individually on advanced research projects. Some will be studying at colleges this summer. Hereditary strains of the fruit fly are under study in this picture.

Education Must

Studio Art masters try their hand at sculpture.

Emphasis in foreign language classes is upon conversational facility. Italian class prepares an original film on Italy.

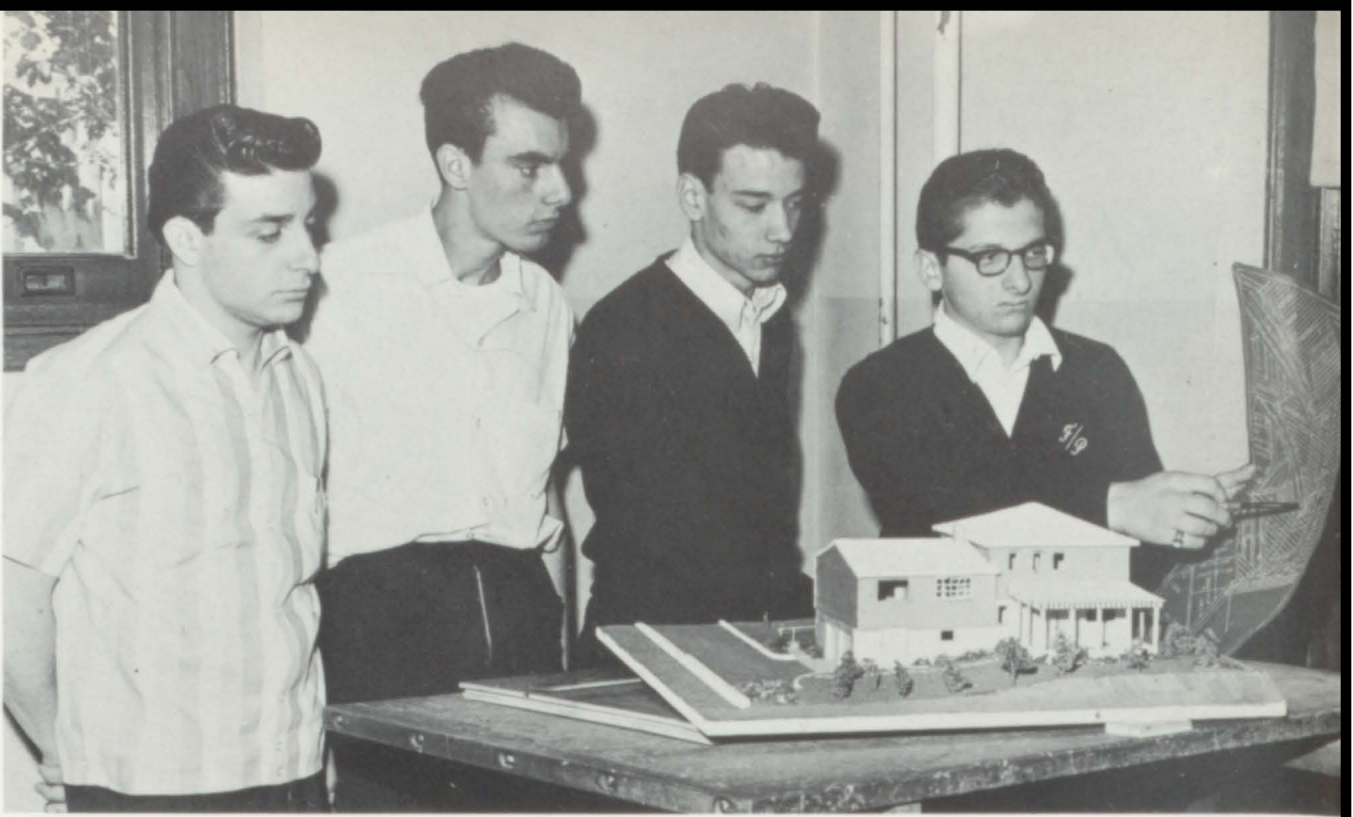

Develop the Individual

Mrs. Taranto gives individual instrumental instruction. Most of the students in the orchestra learn how to play an instrument in the school.

Architectural Drawing Class students draft blueprints for their dream houses and then they make scale models.

The Imperatives of Our Times

There is a critical shortage of skilled technologists in this nation. The ability to accurately translate blueprints and draw them up are essential skills in modern industry. Spatial relations and abstract reasoning are vital components in this training.

One third of the recruits for the Armed Services are rejected for physical disability. This is a shocking statistic in a nation that boasts of an adequate food supply and quality medical service. In response to Presidential pleas, the Physical Education Department has been earnestly striving to develop individual physical fitness. Individual sports activities such as golf, tennis, bowling, swimming, and ice skating are available to all students

Barringer High squad placed second in the Essex County Marine Corps physical fitness test.
